National Grange President reviews past year of success, outlines plans for the future

BY PHILIP J VONADA

National Grange Communications Director

In recent years, fraternal organizations have struggled to gain and retain members, but the National Grange is turning that around.

The president of the oldest agricultural organization in the United States reported a year of growth and action during her annual address at the opening of the 156th Annual Convention of the National Grange in Sparks, Nevada.

"I am delighted to report that... because of your hard work and dedication to your Granges and communities, we have indeed come back stronger after difficult years" in spite of Covid-19, President Betsy E. Huber announced. The National Grange posted a net gain of more than 3% in new fraternal members from July 2021-June 2022. This included significant growth in the category of family and Junior memberships, proving that people are looking for ways to bring their families together while supporting their communities.

Legislatively, "the National Grange continues to gain more recognition as a valuable grassroots source of information and influence," she said, "Joining with many other associations, we amplify our voice on policy issues."

In Washington, DC, the National Grange has been busy working on behalf of Grange members and all of rural America. "[We]... lobbied against tax increases which could have harmed farmers," which had been in early versions of the Build Back Better Bill. This was done, in part, through partnerships with other major agricultural interest groups.

Advocacy is key for the future

BY BETH SOUTHWORTH

Communication Fellow

At the Advocacy Luncheon on Tuesday, November 14, President Betsy Huber stated how proud she is of the Grange's advocacy. The speakers at the Luncheon were Ed Lawson, Mayor of Sparks, and Emily Haggstrom, Vice President of Communications and Creative Development of the Consumer Energy Alliance.

Lawson has been Mayor of Sparks since 2020, and he is very proud of his city. According to Lawson, Sparks is "where you raise children" for the 108,000 residents.

He invited attendees to enjoy the sights and sounds of Sparks while visiting for the Convention, including just behind the hotel in Victorian Square.

This six-block area of redevelopment is home to 5,000 residents. The area includes the Gold Nugget Amphitheater. Also of interest is the Sparks museum named for former Governor Sparks. The most photographed area of Sparks is a mural of a heart with a family inside the heart which is on the side of the movie theater.

library Act, and lobbied for agriculture and food research investments - particularly in practices that improve climate resilience and sustainability - and the Ocean Shipping Reform Act, which “severely hampered exports of agricultural products,” Huber said.

“Earlier this year, we conducted a rural voter poll on healthcare priorities in rural America,” Huber said, which revealed that rural Americans want to prioritize transparency in the healthcare field, require rebates to pass to patients, and cap out-of-pocket expenses. The survey also identified obstacles to rural mental healthcare. Huber touted that organizations are coming to the Grange “because of our grassroots connections to the rural population,” including a partnership with Rural Minds.

In healthcare, the National Grange lobbied for Medicare Multi-Cancer Early Detection Screening Coverage Act for a blood test that can identify 50 types of cancer, urged the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services to reconsider a promising Alzheimer’s treatment, and lobbied for the Protecting Seniors through Immunization Act. “It is important to do everything we can for our health and the health of the seniors, children, and at-risk populations around us,” Huber added.

Other work during the year included lobbying for the Postal Service Reform Act (including a meeting with Postmaster General Louis DeJoy), the right-to-repair, expanding rural broadband and ensuring equitable access in broadband deployment, and supporting the Freight Rail Shipping Fair Market Act and urging President Biden to intervene against rail strikes.

“Looking to 2023, there is no shortage of issues that the National Grange will be working on,” Huber said, turning to future priorities and plans.

“In the agricultural arena, the Farm Bill programs are all on the table...” Huber said, noting that the National Grange is “not a single-issue or single-commodity group... [to] advocate for the best interests of farmers and rural residents.” The Grange will be working with legislators who are already having conversations about what programs and initiatives may be included in the next Farm Bill. Huber vowed that the National Grange would remain a key, non-partisan player on priority issues, despite a divided Congress.

“We hope to see a final, definitive decision from the Supreme Court on... Waters of the U.S., clarifying the definition of navigable waters,” and also drafting regulations for what it means. She noted that the Grange will be a voice in the sustainability debates about carbon markets and emissions. “Farmers are the original conservationists,” she said, “and we hope the carbon market will be a source of revenue for farmers, not a source of more... red tape.”

The National Grange will monitor issues including inflation, energy sources and policy, infrastructure, forestry, access to medical care, and rural mental health care, and will have an eye on the interests of rural America. “We need to be watching and be prepared to weigh in on the debates,” she added.

Huber concluded her address by saying, “Since 1867, the National Grange has been the voice of agriculture, rural life, and small communities in America.” She applauded the way that Granges advocate for local, state, and national issues, saying “this genuine grassroots policy development process sets the Grange apart... Our nation’s leaders know that when they meet with the Grange, we are bringing the grassroots rural small-town voice to the table.”

The success of Sparks is due to the influx of money. The softball field in the marina area attracts teams from around the nation, and results in 25 million dollars of regional impact. Since the legalization of marijuana in Nevada, taxes have become available to replace fields in a timely manner in the Grass For Grass Program. Sparks has used rent subsidies and other Cares Act Funds to develop a “cares campus” of 600 beds for the homeless. Nearly ninety percent of the people who are unhoused in Sparks is due, in part, to mental illness.

Lawson’s motto is “find a way to say yes,” which alludes to inclusion, acceptance and compromise.

Emily Haggstrom, Vice President of Communications & Creative Development, Consumer Energy Alliance also addressed the crowd at the luncheon. As Vice President of Communications, Haggstrom represents a cross-section of the community. Consumer Energy Alliance represents 350 member organizations and 500 individuals from around the country. Haggstrom focuses on working in a bipartisan manner, and that the nature of energy has created hardships due to lower wages.

Haggstrom states politics is hyper-local due to the different resources of each community. Policymakers affect your community, so advocacy should be hyper-targeted, and local media understands who you are, where you went to school, and what you like. Always remember the “average Joe” has a powerful voice through various means of activism. Haggard spoke of “Twitter bombs” received by legislators who feel pressured to act on legislation due to what feels like a large number of people. However, the “squeaky wheel” gets the attention, on all sides of issues.

Companies like Consumer Energy Alliance can help amplify your message, and assist your ability to work together. Current issues of interest that the Consumer Energy Alliance and Grange share are broadband, healthcare, and high energy costs. When asked about her hopes, Haggstrom stated the Grange is a well-established respected organization with members who strive to be heard not only in policy but in the community.

“Showcasing” the best of the region

BY CAROYLN CHAMLEE

Communication Fellow

What began as an empty ball-room quickly began to fill with the best and most treasured items for Granges to put on display for attendees. The Showcase room is vast and yet can barely contain all the spectacular displays brought into the 156th National Grange Convention.

The Showcase, organized by Katie Squire, features many states from around the Western Region. The ‘Best of the West’ section of tables is filled with displays from Washington, Oregon, Nevada, Idaho, Montana, and California, where every table is richly decorated with a selection of items from the state displays their Grangers in action, and other fun and interesting items. Host state Nevada displayed bumper stickers with the correct pronunciation of their state - education is a lifelong pursuit after all.

The Grange Youth Fair Program has an abundant display. Educational banners, tri-folds, specialty awards, and ribbons won by the Youth from this past year are on display. One award, the Herdsmanship Award, is given to the youth group at a livestock show who has the best decorations, interacts with the public, and demonstrates the best husbandry of their animals.

Lina Baughn’s display features over sixty ribbons. Baugh, a Pee-Wee member of Battle Born Stockton Well Grange #29 (NV), stepped into the show rings in a big way this past year; she spent the year showing her rabbits, turkeys, and chickens. In addition, she began learning to show dairy goats. Baugh voiced that her favorite part of showing this year was the dairy goats because she got to learn new things about animals.

Crystal Baughn, Lina’s mother, hopes her daughter learned that winning does not always mean getting a ribbon, but conquering your fears in the show ring.

Tables will be loaded edge-to-edge representing the Communication Fellows, Grange Youth & Young Adults, Junior Grange, Community Service, Grange Foundation, the Dictionary Project, Grow Club, Nevada Mining, and the 2023 National Grange Host Region (the Northeast). There are displays dispersed around the room representing livestock, agriculture, and reminders of being a good sport while at shows.

Near the front of the room are a couple of tables with educational displays as the backdrop. These displays on horse judging, Nigerian Dwarf Goats, milking goats, rabbits, and chickens serve as the backdrop for the Voices of Grange. The Voices of Grange will give Grangers a space to showcase their talents and passions.

Voices of Grange will have presentations on the first Four Degrees, LEGO robotics, reining, networking in Grange, agricultural mythology, prescribed burns, and the Grange Knights. As the Grange Knights like to proclaim, “Make way for the Grange.”

Presentations begin once the showcase opens Wednesday night and continue until midday Saturday. You will not want to miss out on this opportunity to have this multitude of inspirations all in one area.

What is the Grange Foundation?

BY CARYN HERMAN

Communication Fellow

The Grange Foundation was formed in 1964 by Herschel Newsom, the Grange's National President at the time, and the National Grange Executive Committee to assist the National Grange in providing perpetual growth opportunities for our future generations of leaders. The heart of the Foundation is realized in its mission statement which exemplifies the soul of the National Grange itself. Their mission statement reads, "The Grange Foundation supports youth development, promotes agriculture education and research, improves communities, and fosters culture, heritage, citizenship, and charitable activities". Today, the Grange Foundation manages several dedicated funds in support of its mission statement.

Grange Foundation is registered as a 501(c)3 nonprofit corporation. The funds gathered to support the opportunities offered come from individual, corporate, and fund-raised donations. From January through September of this year, the Foundation brought in $31,950. According to Joan C. Smith, Chairwoman of the Grange Foundation, the Telethon for the National Grange Youth and Junior Grange programs was a tremendous success. She pointed out that without the Telethon, the Foundation would have only brought in $6,266 in the year.

What does that mean? The Grange Foundation has no permanent income, so we need to get BUSY! There will be no Telethon in 2023, and can the Grange Foundation function and support programming on just $6,266? Smith encouraged the State Grange Delegates to give from their hearts and offered many ways Grangers can contribute.

Grange Foundation sponsored a seminar in April as a part of Grange Month programming. The seminar, entitled "Solving the Puzzle of Estate Planning and Long-Term Care," was presented by John Smith, an Elder Attorney from Florida. The seminar discussed alternate ways to donate that would relieve an estate from forthcoming tax burdens. Inheritance, state, and federal taxes were discussed. This seminar will be repeated during Grange

Opinion: Grange can have a bigger voice in rural healthcare and insurance

BY BETH SOUTHWORTH

Communication Fellow

Rural healthcare has been a long-standing issue for the Grange. A 2017 Kaiser Family Foundation study found that rural Americans face significant barriers to accessing care, including provider shortages, less early intervention and preventative care.

Rural Americans have less access to health care than Americans who live in urban or suburban environments. Generally, the most specialized hospitals and doctors are located in big cities. Teaching hospitals that are on the cutting edge of technology establish themselves near large population centers.

Many rural Americans are self-employed, working in farming, trades and small businesses and thus, they lack health insurance through an employer and must pay out-of-pocket for potentially subpar insurance. Many rural communities are dependent on a single local doctor's office, and if they need any specialized care, they face added costs and long trips to medical facilities.

Meidcare.gov cites that nearly 80 million Americans were enrolled in Medicaid or Children's Health Insurance Program (CHIP) in 2021, but twelve states with large rural populations have failed to expand Medicaid and CHIP to meet the needs of their residents. The availability of marketplace coverage, Affordable Care Act (ACA), and other basic health programs through the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) are also limited, especially in these twelve states, and the United States Census Bureau says that "residents of rural counties still lack insurance at higher rates than those living in urban areas."

Could the Grange address physician shortages by encouraging the education of physicians-in-training about the benefits of establishing a rural practice? These benefits include autonomy, greater personal involvement with their patients and lower rent for their facility. Goldfish Medical Staffing in Texas says that there are six benefits of practicing Medicine in Rural America:

- Rural physicians have more time for family and fun due to shorter commutes with less traffic.
- The starting salary tends to be higher in rural areas due to the ability to see more patients.
- They are able to perform a wider variety of procedures than in larger hospitals.
- They are respected community members.
- Physicians are welcomed into the community and often have a waiting list of patients.
- Rural physicians have a chance to make a difference in the community where they practice.

Here are some ideas I have for how the Grange can be an even bigger voice for rural healthcare:

I believe that the Grange should encourage funding through available federal programs to provide rural Americans greater access to insurance, and that Grange members should be encouraged in a nonpartisan manner to seek out and elect politicians who will increase, rather than decrease, these programs.

I believe the Grange should advocate for federal loan forgiveness for physicians setting up practice in any area where there are shortages of physicians.

I believe the Grange should advocate that the federal government remove barriers for foreign trained physicians to practice in rural areas of the US.

I believe the Grange should advocate for modified regulations to make telehealth more widely available to rural Americans, and that Grange members should advocate for low-cost computers and better Wi-Fi access in rural communities to ensure rural Americans have the means to access telehealth.

Perhaps local Granges could coordinate transportation cooperatives to provide transportation to those who are too sick, old or without resources to travel to distant medical facilities.

If the Grange is to be an advocate for all of rural America, particularly in the growing needs of rural healthcare, it is time to think outside of the box and be an even stronger, louder voice for those in need.

Education: Hippos at the 156th Convention?

BY CAROLYNN CHAMLEE

Communication Fellow

While the word “hippopotamus” means “river horse”, Hippology is the study of horses and is the title of an equine veterinary and management knowledge contest.

Hippology was always my favorite project and contest growing up. It challenges the entire scope of one equestrian knowledge. Hippology contests are a true test of one’s knowledge of the horse world.

Hippology contests can cover any equine subject, including reproduction, training, parasites, riding disciplines, history and origins, anatomy, physiology, driving, harnessing, horse management, breeds, genetics, colors, famous horses in history, parts of the saddle, types of bits, gaits, poisonous plants, nutrition, and more.

In a Hippology competition, there are 3-4 phases, which consist of horse judging, a written examination, and ten stations, and if you are part of a team, there is a team problem.

In the horse judging phase, contestants judge a series of horse classes. These classes typically include some halter classes as well as under saddle classes. Each class will have four horses and contestants are given a judging card to place the horses. Unlike horse judging competitions, hippology competitors are not expected to give reasons but only place the classes. During this phase, contestants have to remember the type of class they are judging as well as the rules of the class.

For example, if there is a broodmare class with three Quarter Horse mares and one molly mule, then the mule would be in fourth place. A broodmare class is a halter class judged on the ability to have offspring. The mule would not place above fourth because mules are a hybrid species. With an odd number of chromosomes, mules are typically sterile. In most cases, mules can not produce offspring.

In under-saddle, or riding classes, the competitors may judge English, Western, Reining, Jumping, Dressage, Trail, or Driving classes. Horses are shown through the required movements, or gaits, as each discipline requires.

The written examination phase is a multiple-choice, true/false, matching, or fill-in-the-blank test. The examination can cover any of the topics and any of the information from the designated sources. There is no time limit on the testing phase. One example of a test question would be to match the definition of a mule and a hinny. Mules are a cross between a female horse and a male donkey, while a hinny is a cross between a male horse to a female donkey.

The station phase includes ten stations, each with pictures or objects to be identified and a list of multiple-choice answers. Every station has a theme and can cover topics such as anatomy, poisonous plants, and tack, to name a few. A time limit exists of only 2 minutes per station.

The Battle Born Stockton Well Grange Hippology Stations will be displayed during the 156th National Convention. Every day will feature a different set of Stations with an answer sheet for anyone wanting to test their knowledge. The answers for the Stations will be posted later for anyone wanting to check their answers.

The final phase is the Team Problem which requires a team of three or four members. Teams will present their solution for a problem to a judge or judges. Each team receives 10–15 minutes to discuss the problem, form a solution, and prepare their presentation.

One example of a team problem could be the following:

Upon entering the barn at 7 am, you discover a horse has rolled at some point over the night and become cast – or stuck – against the wall of the stall. You do not know how long the horse has been stuck. How should you approach the situation? What health and safety issues should you keep in mind?

In this phase, no written materials are allowed. Teams then have an average of 5 minutes to present their solution. Team members are judged on their teamwork, the accuracy of their solutions, and their presentation skills.

The depth of knowledge needed to do well in the Hippology contests is vast. How many horse breeds can you name? Who is Cactus and what makes him special? Can you name the foal delivery phases or three characteristics of quality hay?

For those who have a deep passion for all things in the equine world, this is a very challenging and rewarding project. I encourage you to take some time to go check out the stations on display, brush up on all things horse related, and give the stations a try.

Month in 2023. Just remember - you are never too young to start estate planning. Smith encourages everyone to make time to attend.

Smith also suggested other modest and more immediate ways to donate. For instance, the AmazonSmile program (“You shop, Amazon gives”) supports the Foundation through quarterly donations from individuals’ shopping. This can be activated by visiting smile.amazon.com, typing “Grange” in the search box, and selecting The Grange Foundation. Amazon donates a portion of your purchase price without you having to think about it.

If you do not shop on Amazon, you can still donate to any of the Foundation’s areas of interest by simply contacting the Grange Foundation or donating directly through the website. Joan suggested other easy ideas such as eating at home on a night you might otherwise eat out and choose to donate that money instead, or donating $23 for 2023. No matter how you choose to give, every penny counts. The future of our programming depends on the generosity of all Grangers. We all should be as passionate about the Grange Foundation as Joan C. Smith.

New faces, new perspectives

This year, more than 16 new Delegates have joined the National Grange Delegate body. In the next few issues, we will be highlighting the new members in the Patrons Chain, so everyone can get to know the people who will be helping to shape the National Grange agenda as voting members.

Elaine Smith

What state are you from?

New York

What Grange do you belong to? Colonel Harper #1508

How many years have you been a Grange member?

Junior Grange in 1968 and “moved up” in 1977.

What is your favorite Grange memory/activity/event/project/show? Being Lady Assistant Steward as a youth officer in Rhode Island in 1983. Also being a Junior Director for New York and meeting her husband at Junior Grange camp.

What are some personal goals you wish to accomplish?

Revitalizing the Pomona system in New York and reestablishing the regional Deputy system for New York.

What is a piece of advice you have for new/upcoming members? You get out of the Grange what you put into it.

Who is a mentor that has influenced you? The most recent High Priest of Demeter, Bruce Croucher. He was the State Youth Director when she was a Youth and was practically inseparable from his kids while growing up.

What herd animal would you like to be? A sheep, but really the shepherd of the sheep.

Mark Gibbons

What state are you from?

Washington D.C.

What Grange do you belong to? Potomac Grange #1

How many years have you been a Grange member?

3 years.

What is your favorite Grange memory/activity/event/project/show? Attending National Conventions

What are some personal goals you wish to accomplish?

Wants to make sure he grows his own Grange within.

What is a piece of advice you have for new/upcoming members? Talk to everyone. You never know where you'll find help or if you'll end up helping someone.

Who is a mentor that has influenced you? Dick Weiss, who pushed Mark to join the Grange.

What herd animal would you chose to be? He would be the opossum.

Tricia Taylor

What state are you

from? New Hampshire

What Grange do you

belong to? Blazing Star #71

How many years have you been a Grange

member? 53 years, 5th generation.

What is your favorite Grange memory/activity/event/project/show? Tough question. So many great things about the Grange especially family. My grandson nominated me for President and escorted me to the Altar when I was elected.

What are some personal goals you wish to accomplish?

Improve communication, and for states to communicate better with local Granges.

What is a piece of advice you have for new/upcoming members? Take every opportunity, learn leadership, and expand your network.

Who is a mentor that has influenced you? My mom, Phyllis Taylor.

What herd animal would you like to be? A dog, because they are loyal and protective of their family.

Danielle Hartley

What state are you

from? Rhode Island

What Grange do you

belong to? Moosup

Valley Grange #26

How many years have

you been a Grange

member? 17 years.

What is your favorite
Grange memory/activity/event/project/show? Volunteering at the Washington County Fair concessions stand.

What are some personal goals you wish to accomplish? Supporting her husband, Walter, who was just elected as the Rhode Island State President. As well as finding her niche to better support the Grange.

What is a piece of advice you have for new/upcoming members? For new members to get out there and participate to maximize the Grange experience.

Who is a mentor that has influenced you? Her husband, who is a third generation Granger.

What herd animal would you chose to be? She would be their state's animal- the llama.

Western Region delights at host reception

The States of the Western Region held a fantastic host reception on Monday evening. State Presidents and representatives introduced the things that make their states unique, while guests enjoyed cake and fellowship. The Ballet Folklorico Nuestra Herencia Mexicana dancers from High Desert Grange #22 (NV) delighted the audience with their regional dances.
